

Fig. S1. Cutaneous lymphoma masquerading as acral syndrome. Histopathology findings. Histologic features were identical on all biopsy, highlighting a lymphomatous infiltrate within deep dermis composed of pleomorphic cells with focal features of angiodestruction (a–c, Haematoxylin eosin safran, $\times 100$, $\times 300$, $\times 400$, respectively).